

Weiss-isms

by Phillip W. Weiss

(Inspired by the words of Yogi Berra)

Why smell a rose when you can smell a flower?

War is almost the same as fighting.

Why fight when we can have a war?

Why talk when we can speak?

The bigger the crowd, the more people there are.

This town would be great if it weren't so bad.

Winning is better than coming in first.

If you can't see the ball, then don't hit it.

Never go up while going down (and vice-versa).

Thinking is ninety percent mental.

I'd rather add and subtract than do arithmetic.

Riding a horse is like riding a thoroughbred.

A bark is as good as a woof.

Writing a novel is like telling a story.

Movies are better than cinema.

Why go to a doctor when you can go to a physician?

When it's over it's finished.

In a two-horse race, it's better to finish second than last.

Better to be the main attraction than the star.

Zero is better than nothing.

Better to drive a car than an automobile.

Never gamble when you can bet.

Breaking the law is different than committing a crime.

I'd rather be an actor than a thespian.

I'd rather be poor than live in poverty.

The screams of silence are deafening.

I'd rather join the army than be in the military.

A great country is superior to a great nation.

A contract is more useful than an agreement.

Why travel to Europe when you can go to France (or Germany, etc.)?

History is just like old news.

Why fly when you can take an airplane?

I'd rather drive than sit behind the wheel.

I'd rather have a job than be employed.

I'd rather make money than get paid.

Why gamble when you can play the lottery?

Never own something when you can buy it.

A piece of meat is better than a steak.

The future never happened.
