

The Politics of Violence

by Phillip W. Weiss

You're born, you live a life, and then you die. That is the cycle of life. That's just the way it is. There is no changing that fact. One day you are gone. Your physical remains are disposed of, hopefully put in a place where they can lie undisturbed accompanied by a marker indicating your name and attesting to the fact that you lived and should not be forgotten.

To obliterate a grave is the most grievous form of sacrilege. Yet, there are those who for purely political reasons would obliterate the cemeteries on the false and meanspirited belief that these people do not warrant honor or remembrance. Luckily, these truly nasty and perverse people are in the minority. One may argue that such outrageous vandalism could never occur, that no one can be so degenerate as to seriously want to destroy graves, but then one need only be reminded of the mobs of maniacs driven by a vicious political agenda who, fueled by an uncontrollable hatred for everything upon which civilization is founded, tore down statues and defaced public monuments. They are the same hate-driven people who want to defund the police, legalize the use and distribution of narcotics and other poisonous substances that KILL, legalize predatory street violence and other threats to public safety as legitimize forms of social expression, and label anyone who believes in law and order as fascists and Nazis.

This is what they want, and they are willing to do ANYTHING to achieve their nefarious aims, no matter how destructive the consequences. They are out there, they are diligently working to achieve their goals and if allowed to act unchecked, they would do exactly what they say they would do, which is destroy everything. Is this what you want?
